Here is a thought from last week's homily: The militant Church is the Church on earth. It reflects both the best of human nature and the worst of it. Every goodness of which people are capable exists in the Church. Every sin that exists in the world exists in the Church. It would be willfully naive for us to think that in the Church all our leaders are saints. It would be willfully judgmental of us to believe none of them are.

I am a fixer. When something is broken, I want to fix it. This urge in me is so strong! If I had a broken mower in the garage and wanted to put it on the curb to be taken away during spring clean up, I would repair it first. If a tee shirt has a hole in it, I want to mend and wash it before I toss it. So now you know, I am kind of quirky...or kind of obsessive compulsive.

My fixer-upper tendencies come from my father. I remember he used to recycle nails. If he ever had the opportunity to salvage a nail, he would. Then periodically he would sit with a hammer at the vice in his shop to straighten and sort the bent and rusty nails. When he died 17 years ago, he had pickle jars full of nails that he had straightened and saved for projects that existed only in his mind. Still, he was satisfied just to have saved the nails.

What happens when a fixer can't fix the problem? Then it becomes important to look at a bigger picture. Look beyond the mower and the nail with the eyes of faith.

Family and relationships can be broken. We want to fix them, but sometimes they are beyond repair, or so it seems. So, what do we do? In the big picture, your sibling or neighbor is not your enemy. We have only one enemy, and it is the devil. We may see people in our lives as bent and rusty. In faith, they are never beyond hope. St. Mother Teresa picked dying people from the street, washed them up and tended to their every need. If they had only a moment left to live, she wanted them to gaze into her eyes, the eyes of love, as they passed from this world to the next. She could not save them; she offered them a savior's love. Who will be the eyes of love for the torn and dirty people in the back yards of our families and neighborhoods?

Our savior recycles nails. He thirsts for the bent and rusty one. He seeks the lost sheep. We may not be able to fix family and friends; we can love them in their brokenness. That is exhausting. Even if our love has limits, the love of Jesus is inexhaustible. So, regroup and try again. This time let go of your expectations and simply love what is.

October 8th is on the way! Sacred Heart Cares' fun-filled ladies' gathering will be in a unique indoor setting, a beautifully refurbished barn!
