Here is a thought from last week's homily, "Because we have been adopted by the Spirit, we should give up our earthly lives...The Church is our Mother... We should cling to Heaven, not to things in this world."

A Testimonial on Adoration:

When I first contemplated signing up for an hour of Adoration on Tuesdays, I resisted and told/asked myself

- I don't have time.
- I cannot handle another commitment.
- I am comfortable with where I am with my faith and my spirituality.
- What would Adoration do for me?
- What do you do for a whole hour in a silent church, usually alone?

With all these questions and feelings of reluctance, it took a big shove from the Holy Spirit to one day put my name on the Adoration schedule. I really didn't want to; I just felt like I had to.

So I started. Sometimes I just sat in silence, enjoying my solitude with the Eucharist. Sometimes for just a few minutes; sometimes for a long time. Frequently, I was not even sure what had been running through my mind during the time I was not actually praying. I just know that when I finally moved out of this silent time with the Lord and reached for either my rosary or for whatever spiritual reading I had brought with me, I felt different. I felt more settled, more content. I felt peace. I moved from seeing Christ's presence in the monstrance on the altar to feeling his presence within my soul. This change in me has been consistent. I have come to cherish that feeling of peace.

I usually pray the rosary at Adoration. Somehow praying the rosary with that large statue of Mary holding the child Jesus in front of me feels different, more personal, than saying it elsewhere. I now go into Adoration with a Bible and some other spiritual reading. Depending on how much time I have spent in silent "communion" with God, I may read in both, I may read in one or the other, I may not read either. I just come to adoration with some options and do whatever the Spirit moves.

I value my hour of Adoration. I protect it and refuse to schedule any other activity during my hour unless there is really no choice. I encourage you to make this same commitment. I assume that your life is as busy as mine and that you feel the same reluctance as I did about making a commitment to Adoration. I can only tell you that the more frenzied I feel, the more I get from my Adoration hour. It doesn't feel like a responsibility; it feels like an opportunity. It feels like I am pampering myself when the rest of life seems so difficult.

Won't you join me?

Marlys
