202 West Maple, Frazee MN 56544 November 4, 2018 Website: <http://frazeesacredheart.org>

Here is a thought from last week's homily: Go ahead, tell Jesus what is on your heart. Give him a chance to heal you, to direct your desires and to purify your plans.

In his closing remarks regarding the synod on the youth, the Holy Father used the phrase "casta meretrix," "chaste whore" to describe the Church. Here is a little background.

Not only Christians, but even the Church herself, will need to acquire something of the serenity of the martyrs in order to face the challenging humiliations—deserved or undeserved—that come to her from the world. "Christians should not react like overdressed sissies if now and then a justified or even (in God's name) unjustified blow . . . should graze them." This is, indeed, a grace of purification that can be beneficial to the whole body: "A good field of wheat is always grateful for a cleansing thundershower. Even if a few stalks should break, most of them come out refreshed and breathing more freely."47 The truth that sets us free often shows itself to us sinners in the form of a confession of sin. The Casta meretrix is not afraid of such confession, even when it is forced from her, because she knows that it does not conflict with the holiness that she is also commanded, to her consternation (cf. Lk 1:29), to acknowledge before the world. She sees in this the invitation to an "unveiling" that is painful but salutary. When accepted and lived from the heart, it immediately produces a beneficial effect. "He who does what is true comes to the light," says St. John (Jn 3:21). And St. Paul remarks that someone who is open to the truth is "light in the Lord" (Eph 5:8), because "anything that becomes visible is light" (5:14).
