During the winter months, if school is either cancelled or 2 hours late, Adoration will be cancelled.

Here is a thought from last week's homily: We do set goals for our lives, and we work hard to achieve them. It is sometimes challenging to remember that a goal is not God.

My daddy died 18 years ago. He has made both cameo and leading-role appearances in my dreams over the years. The dreams have never been unsettling. They have been comforting, like an unexpected gift. I remember Mother's first dream of Dad after his death. He appeared to Mom in white robes. There were no words exchanged. Mom concluded, "Your father is at peace."

I dream about Dad. I think about him. I try to hear his voice and wonder what he would say to me today. My grief is active and peaceful, with an occasional moment of intensity.

It doesn't matter if you lost a loved one last week or 50 years ago; you are still grieving. Grief can be agonizing or peaceful; often it is an ebb and flow of both.

Mom, my ten siblings, the in-laws and grandchildren are all grieving, and we grieve differently, each of us in our own way. When grief is raw, it can be difficult to be in the presence of someone who is in a different place. We can feel alone and unsupported, and we can feel guilty for wanting other loved ones to hurt as much as we do.

In grief we experience denial, bargaining, anger and acceptance. And then there is sadness and loneliness. These "stages" are not linear. and we never graduate from them. It is a school that is best attended with faith, "...for we do not grieve like the rest, like those who have no hope..."

In our grief, let us be patient and understanding. Let us remember that grief is intensely personal and that someone grieving differently is not bad. When someone is stuck, ask if they are open to a conversation. Share your experience. Be consoling. Do not judge. Pray hard. If they have fallen into depression, offer to let them know where there is help.

Eternal rest grant unto them, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon them.
